In Hilbert expresses this view in these terms: This circumstance corresponds to a conviction I have long maintained, namely, that a simultaneous construction of arithmetic and formal logic is necessary because of the close connection and inseparability of arithmetical and logical truth. The foundational view proposed here by Hilbert is radically different from the standard one that tries to ground all mathematical knowledge on a single concept. We shall not consider other aspects of verse, such as types of stanza or the phonic question of rhyme.
